Committee Report (Substituted)

DIGEST

Currently, the federal Personal Responsibility and Reconciliation Act of 1996 requires states to provide 20 hours of work activities for 25 percent of their public assistance recipients in fiscal year 1997. However, by 2002, states must have 50 percent of welfare recipients working at least 30 hours a week. The federal welfare law defines eligible work activities as unsubsidized employment, subsidized private or public employment, work experience, on-the-job training, job search and job readiness activities, community service programs, vocational education programs, job skills training, and satisfactory attendance of secondary school for recipients who have not completed high school. This legislation authorizes the division of workforce development of the Texas Workforce Commission to provide ongoing job retention and reemployment assistance for certain recipients of public assistance, in an effort to improve the long-term success of participants in job-training programs. C.S.S.B. 1262 also requires the Texas Department of Human Services, in providing work skills and job readiness training, to emphasize training for sustainable wage jobs, encourage nontraditional work opportunities for recipients, and offer micro-enterprise development and self-employment assistance in areas in which jobs are scarce.

PURPOSE

As proposed, C.S.S.B. 1262 provides for employment and training for certain persons on public assistance.

RULEMAKING AUTHORITY

This bill does not grant any additional rulemaking authority to a state officer, institution, or agency.
