AUTHOR'S / SPONSOR'S STATEMENT OF INTENT

In fiscal year 2008 almost 45,000 Texas children were in the legal care of the state, relying on the courts to protect them from further harm. Civil child abuse cases are highly specialized and involve complex legal, medical, and psychological issues; however, these issues are typically not taught in law schools or in most continuing legal education programs. The county-funded cases do not have budgets adequate to provide the children's court-appointed attorneys with expert medical and psychological consultants or with online research tools for case preparation, despite the fact that these cases can involve life and death decisions for the children. Although the judges and the children's court-appointed attorneys strive to do their best, they are often stymied by an astonishing lack of resources. Recognizing this, the Supreme Court of Texas created the Permanent Judicial Commission for Children, Youth and Families in November 2007 to oversee much-needed court improvement in the child protection system.

When courts fail to make good decisions in child abuse cases, the costs are staggering, not only for the children, who may be abused again, but for the state as well. Children who live in perennially unsafe homes are far more susceptible to dropping out of school, depression, suicide, juvenile delinquency, unemployment, substance abuse, teen pregnancy, homelessness, and adult criminality. The resulting costs to the state include increased court costs, foster care, welfare, and incarceration.

To achieve the best outcomes for abused children in their court cases, judges and attorneys need a constantly available, trusted source for state-specific legal, psychological, and medical resources, as well as expertise, and a way to communicate with colleagues, mentors, and experts. An online resource center with communication tools, as described by this bill, will provide these services to all judges and attorneys handling child abuse cases in Texas.

C.S.S.B. 1062 amends current law relating to creating an online resource center for individuals handling child abuse and neglect cases.
