AUTHOR'S / SPONSOR'S STATEMENT OF INTENT

In 2009, legislation was passed to prohibit anyone except fire inspectors certified by the Texas Commission on Fire Protection from conducting fire safety inspections at home health care and day care facilities. This requirement is having the unintended consequence of leaving these facilities without inspections because there are not enough commission-certified inspectors.

Additionally, this certification requires a 152-hour training course that costs $1,000, a testing fee of $85, and a certification fee of $85. This is especially burdensome on volunteer firefighters in rural areas who were allowed to conduct these inspections prior to 2009.

S.B. 1506 will help ensure that home health care and day care facilities are inspected and inspected properly by expanding the list of certifying entities from which an individual may obtain certification.

As proposed, S.B. 1506 amends current law relating to fire safety inspections.
