3. The Public Wealth of Nations: How Management of Public Assets Can Boost or Bust Economic Growth By Dag Detter and Stefan Fölster
 Argues that the main focus of a nation should be how effectively an asset is being managed – not on whether the asset is privatized or public. Examines the position that politicians may not make good managers by the very nature of politics and differing financial philosophies. Suggests state-owned commercial assets would be better off transferred to a national "wealth fund" that would be run by the most talented private and public sector managers to create "public wealth."

Considers the beginning of the grassroots fight that continues to this day, giving the reader a good understanding of what transpired to get us to the current point in this story.
