DIGEST AND PURPOSE

The economic future of Texas depends on the state's ability to remain at the forefront of scientific and technological innovation. Texas is favorably located and has the infrastructure needed to facilitate growth in the high-tech industry. Texas is positioned to meet the technological challenges of the next century. Currently, Texas ranks second in the nation in the total number of high-tech jobs and first in the number of new jobs created since 1990. There are 772,000 high-tech employees in Texas, approximately 11 percent of the state's workforce.

Texas companies will be able to lead in national and world markets only if there is continuing development of the research base. Universities can comprise a major part of the research base. Through university research, new technologies are developed and commercialized which can create a considerable economic advantage for the state. Investments in research and development can have a considerable rate of return. C.S.H.B. 1839 creates the Texas excellence fund and the university research fund to support and maintain educational and general activities, including research and student services, that promote increased research capacity and develop institutional excellence.
